An Occupational Therapy approach to manage and promote bladder and bowel health

This seminar examines the role of Occupational Therapy in supporting bladder and bowel management, with a focus on promoting functional continence across everyday situations. The session outlines the occupational perspective on continence, highlighting how physical, cognitive, environmental, and psychosocial factors influence occupational performance.

Learners will examine the Occupational Therapy role in assessment, intervention, and collaboration in bladder and bowel care, while reflecting on practice, identifying learning needs, and building confidence in occupation-focused continence management.

Assessment of the hip displacement in children with Cerebral Palsy

Standing in abduction and its application in children with cerebral palsy. When and how to correctly select a standing frame so that it provides the best possible protection for children's hips. How does standing affect the functioning of the whole body and why is it important in the rehabilitation process.

The main effect is to build awareness of standing and its importance. What impact does standing have on our body and when is it appropriate to use front standing and when is it appropriate to use rear standing for the user? Practical applications of stabilizing elements to achieve correct alignment and extension in the hip joint.

F-Words in the bathroom: using the ICF to guide bathroom participation from childhood to adulthood with physical disabilities.

Bathrooms are small spaces with big challenges for people with physical disabilities and those who support them. This session uses the F-Words for Child Development (Function, Family, Fitness, Fun, Friends, Future), grounded in the ICF framework, to reframe bathing and toileting as meaningful occupations that evolve from childhood into adulthood.

Through case-based examples, attendees will explore how occupational therapy reasoning can anticipate transitions, protect dignity, and reduce carer strain.

Breaking the cycle: challenging assumptions in seated posture

Seated posture is often shaped by assumptions that go unchallenged, leading to interventions that manage presentation rather than identify the dominant driver. This session examines how destructive positioning cycles develop when assessment stays at surface level, and why clinicians must look deeper to understand the factors influencing posture, tolerance, function, and health.

Using practical examples, it will show how therapists can act as postural detectives by asking better questions, getting hands-on, and challenging common assumptions. It will also reinforce the influence clinicians have in recognising wider health implications and advocating for seating decisions that are truly holistic, effective, and person-centred.

Unleashing the power of language with AAC

Language is more than words; it's how we connect, learn, grow, and stay safe. For many disabled children and adults, Augmentative and Alternative Communication (AAC) is the key that unlocks this vital part of being human. In this session, we'll explore how AAC can bring language to life for those who cannot always rely on speech. We'll discuss.

why language access is not a luxury, but a fundamental right, one that empowers individuals to express who they are, build relationships, and navigate the world on their own terms.

Protecting postural management during transitional care - A clinically governed approach to interim wheelchair provision

This important non CPD session explores how a clinically governed, rapid-response rental service supports safe transitional care. It shows how assessment-led, time-limited equipment provision protects posture, maintains rehabilitation progress, and supports families and clinicians.

With structured commissioning follow-up, and outcome monitoring, the model ensures continuity, reduces risk, and delivers measurable impact, redefining interim mobility support as a fully supported, evidence-generating pathway.

24hr posture & activity management (PAM): practical ways to support activity every day

This seminar explores how activity can be meaningfully integrated into postural management programmes, moving beyond the traditionally static “lying-sitting-standing” model. We will consider the essential roles that children, parents, and therapists play in shaping alignment, movement, and participation across the full 24 hours.

Participants will gain clear, practical guidance on 24hr PAM, along with a free 24 hour PAM printed resource that both families and therapists can start using straight away.

Sensory steps to toilet success

Skill development for toileting is challenging for many children and their families. Sensory issues often contribute to difficulties. This session will consider the skills required for toileting and adaptations to promote success with toileting for children with different learning and sensory needs.

It will take a step-by-step approach to skill development and to managing any sensory differences so that children feel safe and supported while learning. Signposting to additional resources will be included.

12:00pm

Understanding behaviour as communication: moving away from the ‘naughty label’

This seminar challenges the traditional view of ‘naughty’ behaviour by exploring how all behaviour communicates a need. Through an introduction to the ABCs of behaviour and the four-term contingency (antecedent, motivation, behaviour and consequence) participants will learn to identify what triggers and maintains certain behaviours, and how motivation and reinforcement shape learning.

Using practical examples, the session will demonstrate how data-driven approaches help uncover the function behind behaviours of concern, shifting focus from punishment to proactive, positive strategies that teach meaningful alternatives and create supportive environments for lasting change.

New online course Low level equipment: enhanced

This online, interactive e-learning course focuses on equipment that helps people live more independently, safely and comfortably. It will inform you about key pieces of equipment that you might need to know about in your work.

You'll learn about:

- Types of aids – mobility, toileting, kitchen, bathing, bed, and seating and walking equipment.
- Choosing the right solution – when equipment is helpful and when it may not be suitable.
- Barriers to use – reasons people might reject equipment, like space, cost, appearance, or motivation.
- Best practice – recommending equipment step-by-step to support independence without over-prescribing.

How you'll learn:

The information is presented in a combination of video demonstrations from our expert OT trainers, and text. Through short quizzes, you'll check your understanding and build confidence in matching the right aid to the right need.

By the end, you'll be able to identify low-level equipment that truly supports daily living.

What you'll need:

You just need a phone or computer with internet connection, and headphones or speakers so that you can listen to the audio.
