Proportionate care – why do we need to change the way we move and handle people?

This seminar explores the evolution of moving and handling in response to workforce shortages and the need for timely hospital discharge. It introduces proportionate care, a strength-based approach that encourages people to use their own abilities wherever possible, promoting independence while reducing unnecessary assistance.

The session explains how this approach supports accurate assessment of functional ability, helping to avoid overestimating care needs, reducing delays to discharge, preventing deconditioning, and making better use of limited care resources. It also highlights the benefits for staff safety, workforce sustainability, and cost-effective, person-centred care.

Early communication in children with cerebral palsy

It is estimated that 1 in 4 people with cerebral palsy are unable to talk. This seminar explores key concepts in communication development and how they relate to children with cerebral palsy, or those at high risk of cerebral palsy. Drawing on current evidence, we will identify which children are most likely to have complex communication needs across the diverse presentations of cerebral palsy. We will discuss early intervention approaches, including building on early interaction and play, and explore a range of Augmentative and Alternative Communication (AAC) methods, considering when and how they can be introduced.

Skill development for toileting is challenging for many children and their families. Sensory issues often contribute to difficulties. This session will consider the skills required for toileting and adaptations to promote success with toileting for children with different learning and sensory needs.

It will take a step-by-step approach to skill development and to managing any sensory differences so that children feel safe and supported while learning. Signposting to additional resources will be included.

Through practical examples and activities, the session will help you recognise signs of sensory dysregulation and introduce simple sensory first aid strategies to support wellbeing and regulation. You'll leave with a deeper understanding of sensory needs and practical ideas you can use to support your loved one in a way that is responsive, compassionate, and tailored to them.

Pressure and postural management in seating – principles

The most valuable seating decisions are rarely driven by equipment alone. They are informed by an understanding of the relationship between pressure, posture and function, and by the ability to balance these factors in the context of the individual. This session introduces the Seating Balance Principle™, an educational framework that supports structured thinking around these relationships.

Drawing on current evidence, practical examples and case discussion, delegates will leave with a clearer framework for asking better questions, supporting person-centred clinical reasoning and making more informed seating decisions.

Communication for meaningful participation in adult life: Moving on from education for young people living with cerebral palsy who have complex communication needs

As young people transition on from school there are many changes in daily life. Communication ability and opportunity is essential for meaningful participation in the adult world. This session will focus on individuals with cerebral palsy who have complex communication needs after transition.

We will consider the importance of reviewing communication skills, appropriate augmentative and alternative communication (AAC) supports, changes in communication partners and how to continue to build on communication skills and opportunities into adulthood.
